Moultrie Feeders Introduces New GameSpy Digital Camera
Say Goodbye to Expensive Models

Alabaster, AL –January 12, 2004 –Say good-bye to expensive game cameras with Moultrie Feeders’ new GameSpy digital camera. Moultrie’s digital game camera brings the newest technology along with all the bells and whistles plus some new added features to an incredibly low retail price. Now every hunter can add the digital GameSpy camera to his or her hunting bag for under $200.

1.3 megapixel GameSpy digital camera offers great, standard or high-resolution color pictures day or night and has the capability to take video clips during the day. Built-in memory stores up to 150-standard resolution pictures or insert an SD card for additional picture memory. The GameSpy is the only camera on the market to operate on a 6-volt battery ensuring that the camera stays operational in the field and saves you from spending money on numerous small alkaline batteries. The GameSpy also has a port to accept a solar panel (Moultrie’s retails for $19.99) that will keep your battery life sustained even in the coldest Canadian weather. Camera is easy to set-up and with the laser aiming feature you are able to see and test targeted picture area. Infrared sensor detects movement of game up to 30ft away and automatic flash ensures picture quality even at long ranges and nighttime. Pictures are imprinted with date, time, and location to aid in tracking game movement. The GameSpy features an external LCD display that indicates status on number of pictures taken, pictures remaining, event count, delay timer and battery life. Lockable weather-resistant housing protects the camera from outdoor elements and Mossy Oak[®] camo pattern makes this one great looking digital camera.
